

SYNOPSIS

The Bilderberg Club is a political thriller — blurring the lines of conspiracy theory and conspiracy reality. This fictional examination of the actual Bilderberg Group enlightens audiences, while quenching their thirst for knowledge about the “shadow one world government.”

The audience faces a world of intrigue as they meet the diverse group, consisting of media moguls, scientists, leading business people and even representatives of the pharmaceutical industry that are secretly steering the world economy and the lives of billions. The movie features meetings of the steering committee of the Bilderberg Club. The Bilderberger’s, headed by Dr. Samantha Klein (Allison Arngim), seem to have little consideration for human life as they plan to create a new world banking system that will be partially funded by the profits of the laboratory-created swine flu.

The newest member of the Bilderberg Club, pharmaceutical industry representative Alanis Rogers (Corinne Spicer), seems to be the only one believing in a higher power. She is a Christian that raises concern about the moral impact of genetic engineering and population control, which is sanctioned, promoted and implemented by the Bilderberg Club.

As the Bilderberger’s can’t figure out which member to trust they examine each other’s past, discovering romantic trysts, deceitful alliances. Some members even open themselves up to ultimate betrayals.
